

HYBRID PROJECT MANAGEMENT

תיאור הקורס

Scrum supports teams in successfully developing products. But Scrum is not a complete project management method. As a result, many companies use Scrum (or other agile frameworks) but also want to use elements from classic project management. A hybrid project management is sought.

In fact, "hybrid project management" doesn't exist. It is always a combination of several frameworks.

In this course, we work together to develop the basic questions and elements for the introduction of hybrid project management. In this way we create a basis for you and your team/s to successfully build up your hybrid project management.

Christoph Bisel

In 1999, Christoph put his existing experience as a project manager on a solid footing with a degree in project management with a federal certificate. Since then he has managed projects of various sizes for various companies and was also responsible for the project management of various national branches of an american software manufacturer. He is an accredited trainer for the project management frameworks Prince2[®], Prince2[®] Agile and AgilePM[®] (DSDM Framework).

He first came into contact with Scrum in 2008 and since then has continuously expanded his knowledge and experience with this framework and other frameworks.

Christoph has coaching training as well as a degree and experience as a mediator and is therefore not only able to provide professional support, but also to provide support in personally challenging situations.

As a trainer, consultant and coach, he has been supporting companies in Europe in project management, Scrum, Kanban, Design Thinking, Lego® Serious Play®, OKR and various other methods and frameworks for 5 years.
